

A RECTOR REPORTS

Professors are rated by the seminarians

WASHINGTON—A total of 149 replies were received from seminary rectors, answering a recent survey sent to them by the NC News Service.

Question: "Do you conduct seminars for the seminary professors?" Twenty-six answered yes to the question, and 8, no.

The question also asked: "What program do you have for updating instructors, for keeping their morale and objectives high?"

There were varied answers, but 71 mentioned that the instructors were encouraged to attend special courses, conventions, workshops, seminars, professional meetings, and in-service training courses. Others mentioned summer schools, taking courses at lay universities, outside teaching and lecturing, faculty meetings, etc.

SOME OF THE rectors' comments were:

• Maintaining faculty morale has never been one of our major problems. However, preventing dedicated and enthusiastic priest-teachers from burning themselves out in the execution of their duties is a constantly recurring problem.

• We have the professors rated by the students.

• Malicious and uninformed criticism of seminaries, the fashionable thing these days, is doing irreparable harm to seminary faculties.

Question: "To what extent do you encourage 'outside activities' for students? For faculty members?"

Ninety rectors replied that they encouraged such activities for both students and professors, generally with the provision that these were apostolic activities or, in the phrase of one rector, "to the degree it will contribute to their formation for the priesthood."

Question: "Is there less supervision of the students?"

Of the replies, 87 said yes, and 8 said no.

time, and one said they did not. As to how the time might be used, generally the replies indicated that this was up to the students. Some of the comments from the rectors were:

• There is an attempt made to emphasize personal integrity, personal responsibility, growth and self-discipline.

• There is much less supervision, and more free time... and the latter seems to be used wisely and well by seminarians.

• We do not very much encourage "outside activities" for students in the seminary. The reason is that the priesthood requires a man who is internally formed before he can go to convert the world.

• Inasmuch as the goal of a well-educated clergy cannot be achieved merely through classes and formal study, the students of this seminary are encouraged and strongly urged to take advantage of and part in the broadening cultural programs offered by private agencies and the many colleges in the metropolitan area.

• We are endeavoring to have people recognize that self-determination is a personal responsibility, so that the supervision of one's acts is not left to some perfect down the corridor but actually is to be done by the individual himself.

• Attempt being made to inculcate personal responsibility and good study habits through personal and group motivation—elimination of bells, partial elimination of required study hours, etc.

• I have found a lot of these changes hard going at times but I must admit that our students have never abused the freedom they have received.

Enrollment dip noted in minor seminaries

NEW YORK—The number of boys entering minor seminaries in 1967 to 1968 and a 60% drop in sophomore admissions. Junior year admissions were unchanged, but senior admissions increased by 9%.

But according to a survey of religious communities in the eastern U.S., some of the slack has been taken up by an increase in admissions to the last three years of college seminaries and Brotherhood schools.

THE ASSOCIATION reported on the results of a questionnaire sent to 133 vocation directors of men's religious orders. Replies came from 44 communities with 12,100 priests and Brothers working in the eastern U.S.

Their 35 minor seminaries and juniorates reported a 46% drop in freshman admissions from 1961 to 1966 and a 60% drop in sophomore admissions. Junior year admissions were unchanged, but senior admissions increased by 9%.

THE NUMBER of novices also decreased 19% from 525 to 426 in the same period. There was also a 25% decrease in the number of freshmen entering college level seminaries and Brotherhood schools.

After that, however, the picture was brighter. Sophomore entrances increased 27%, junior entrances 61% and senior entrances went up by 82%.

But, cautioned the association, while the percentages appear encouraging, the actual numbers they represent falls far short of offsetting the drop in earlier vocations.

CITES ROLE OF AUTHORITY

Nuns hear Pontiff emphasize renewal in the religious life

VATICAN CITY—Pope Paul VI, addressing about 1,400 nuns, declared that while authority and obedience remain the major distinguishing characteristics of the religious life, both are in need of reform for the Church's apostolate in the modern world.

He emphasized that "authority must never lose its reason for being and obedience must never degenerate into a democratic dialogue of a simple numerical majority."

At the same time, he confirmed that "authority must be exercised wisely and prudently, and that obedience must be sincerely practiced."

Church — more virtuous and more in keeping with the spirit of Jesus Christ.

This "double problem" of authority and obedience, he stressed to the nuns, "should be the one most closely examined in the overhaul of your rules and in the development of your mentality as religious."

"It demands care, prudence and trust if it is to be brought to a successful conclusion. The times demand it. The council urges it."

Pope Paul spoke in the Hall of Benedictions to delegates attending a special assembly of the Italian Union of Major Religious Superiors gathered in Rome to study the implementation of the Vatican Council's Decree on the Adaptation and Renewal of the Religious Life.

THE POPE BEGAN his talk by reminding the nuns that the renewal of religious life was "vital" if the Church's religious orders and congregations are to serve the Church and the entire world.

He said that the religious life is distinguished, defined and given purpose by a "special kind of love" that "is not something that is merely juridical, conventional and external, but is personal, profound, total, exclusive, intense and absolute."

"This is no time for remaining silent on religious vocations," the Pope declared, for "religious ideas are weakening in many souls and the world as a social unit is losing its sense of religion."

"This is precisely why," he emphasized, "religious vocations must be presented in a forthright manner in the modern world and among women in particular. . . . Religious life must be presented as rising from its lowliness and as an outstanding event in the annals of liberty and freedom and in the annals of courage, awareness, generosity, spirituality and, we can even say, strength and beauty."

Pope Paul went on to observe that religious vocations are not found "among the weak and feeble-minded, unfit to follow a profession in the world or to marry," or in a "hothouse atmosphere where they depend for their fruition on the lack of independence on one side and an authoritarian oppression on the other."

"TELL THIS," he said, "to the souls who are eager for perfection and responsive to evangelical ideals. Our youth is still bright with these ideals and desires. Tell them what a religious vocation really is."

Recognition of the autonomy of education must quickly focus attention on another institution which has developed in the Church under strict tutelage, the press. Ave Maria, a weekly magazine published by the Congregation of Holy Cross at Notre Dame, has recently had a distressing open clash in one big Catholic university. Notre Dame deserves congratulation for anticipating and heading off a similar scandal.

Opinions

You should write another editorial congratulating him for his responsible approach, rather than letting the argument as to constitutionality obscure a very real problem. As I stated at the outset, your editorial was unfortunate and I feel you owe Representative Cloud an apology.

Editor's Note: The Criterion, along with other news media, was misinformed in reporting that the House resolution had been mailed to the Attorney General, when it actually had been hand-delivered to his office. As to whether the resolution was "unusual," it is true that the Attorney General continually advises members of the Legislature on an informal basis during the course of a session and renders opinions to the Governor regarding the validity, constitutionality and effect of all acts passed by the Legislature. It is, however, quite unusual for the House or Senate to pass a formal resolution asking an official opinion on a bill still in committee.

Attorney General as a precondition to taking action on the fair bus bill is the fact that anyone would raise the question of the constitutionality of such legislation inasmuch as it has been in effect in permissive form in this state since 1953. Moreover, Indiana and Illinois were among the amici curiae in the landmark Everson decision of the U.S. Supreme Court establishing the constitutionality of such legislation as the proposed Indiana fair bus bills. The House Education Committee can best serve the interests of the bill in question by sending it to the House floor for debate and vote, preferably with a recommendation for passage.

CLOSING AN ERA—Father Omer Eisenman, retired Archdiocesan priest now residing at St. Paul Hermitage, Beech Grove, recently preached the funeral sermon at St. Paul's Indian Mission in Marly, S.D., for Mrs. Josephine Cody Eisenman, the widow of his late brother, Leonard Eisenman. Mrs. Eisenman, who died in Yankton, S.D. (Jan. 18), had worked alongside her husband 47 years at the mission prior to his death there in 1947. An engineer and construction worker, he was responsible for the erection of the major complex of buildings under the supervision of Benedictine Father Sylvester Eisenman, who devoted 27 years of his life to the Dakota Sioux. The Eisenman brothers witnessed the growth of St. Paul's as one of the largest residential schools for Indian youths in the nation. It now accommodates more than 400 Indian boys and girls. Once under the jurisdiction of Benedictine monks of St. Meinrad Archabbey, St. Paul's is now conducted by the monks of Blue Cloud Abbey.

loan to the predominantly Negro parish after serving six years as assistant treasurer of St. Meinrad Archabbey.

Rared in an all-Negro parish in Louisville, Father Boniface credits his white, Franciscan pastor with encouraging his vocal.

"I had no clear goal about serving my people by becoming a priest," he says. "All I wanted to do was serve my Church." Entering St. Meinrad's in 1947, he made up his mind "to forget about being a Negro and associate with everybody. To be like everybody else was my special project at the monastery," Father Boniface recalls. When he became a Benedictine priest in 1959, he was the first Negro to complete 12 years of seminary studies at St. Meinrad's. A predecessor, Father Cyrian Davis, O.S.B., had been ordained in 1956. However, Father Cyrian received most of his training at the Sulpician Seminary in Washington, D.C., before going to St. Meinrad's, where he now teaches history. At Holy Angels, Father Boniface goes about normal parish duties—Mass, Communion calls, instruction classes, home visits. He believes there is an advantage to Negroes in having "one of their own" as a parish priest, but he feels the priest's attitude is what matters.

"You can't generalize about Negro priests any more than you can generalize about white priests," he cautions. "After all, some of the greatest apostles to the Negro have been white men." Priests who care—Negro or white—who are willing to become a part of their community are needed in the neglected inner-city neighborhoods, Father Boniface believes. It was a rough transition for the young Benedictine moving from the quiet, orderly world of the monastery to an inner-city parish. But in little more than a year, he has supervised a detailed survey outlining community needs, been nominated to the CAAP (War on Poverty) board, and joined in founding the Northwest United Community Action Association.

THE LATTER IS a private, neighborhood organization which will specialize in family counseling as its first service. Through such counseling, under professional direction, Father Boniface hopes to attack what he considers his community's major problem—the economic and cultural deprivation caused by the broken family unit.

The vision of the inner-city church serving its entire neighborhood is the theme to which he constantly returns, saying: "I think our work at Holy Angels is made up of walking around the neighborhood a lot, talking to everybody, going to neighborhood meetings, letting the people see that you are interested in them. You have to associate with people before you can influence them." The Criterion asked Father Boniface if he observed many young Negro boys in the parish interested in the priesthood. "Some appear interested," he said. "But, you know, when I went to St. Meinrad's the idea that a Negro could become a Catholic priest was really special. Today, any career is open, so the priesthood has to compete with science, social work, and all the rest. The barriers are down."

storm broke — visiting the order's missionaries in Puerto Rico.

"The magazine has always made it clear that its editor's opinions do not necessarily reflect the opinions of the Jesuits at large," Father Hennessey said. "And when they printed Msgr. Illich's article, they also printed a note stating that his opinions were not necessarily those of the editors." The article, entitled "The Seamy Side of Charity," was published under the section heading "To Be Perfectly Frank." This section was described in a note as "an occasional feature that, offers an outlet for varied opinions on the current scene in the Church and the world."

Father Hennessey said he thought the editors printed the article as "a controversial piece, as they stated."

FOLLOWING the visit, the Vatican press office issued the following communiqué:

"Today, Jan. 30, at 1:30 p.m., there took place in the private library of His Holiness the scheduled meeting between the Holy Father, Pope Paul VI, and His Excellency Nikolai Podgorny, chairman of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the Soviet Union.

"In the course of the conversation during which the questions relative to the maintenance of peace and to the development of better relations among peoples were amply discussed, the Holy Father spoke also of problems concerning religious life and the presence of the Catholic Church in territories in the Soviet Union."

City who reported that the Latin American Bishops' Council will establish a new department to coordinate its work with that of Protestant churches.

This is only a first step, Archbishop Miranda said, toward true ecumenical action on the continent. He forecast the establishment of similar departments by "every episcopal conference, every country and every single diocese."

Archbishop Miranda was among 14 conference panelists discussing "approaches for joint Catholic-Protestant programs of inter-American cooperation."

Panelists suggested that such a committee should explore ways of combining church training facilities for personnel sent to Latin America among all U.S. citizens; and plan and coordinate new social action programs for Latin American participation by Christians of all churches.

Responding to the suggestions, Msgr. Theodore E. McCarrick, rector of the Catholic University of Puerto Rico in Ponce, said that the university's training center "would be delighted to enter into any relationship with our brother Christians to better train and prepare apostolic workers."

Duncan MacBryde of the National Council of Churches stressed the need for education throughout the United States, particularly for the six million persons a year who will travel to Latin America.

"I see no reason," he said, "why we cannot do this work together."

department of Catholic Relief Services and newly named permanent secretary of the Pontifical Commission for Studies on World Justice and Peace, asked for common effort in the field of social action.

In a general assembly devoted to Protestantism in Latin America, four Protestant churchmen also called for ecumenical cooperation in the integration of Latin America.

HORACIO H. Godoy of Santiago, Chile, director of the Latin American school of political science and public administration, told the conference that the integration of Latin America will not be accomplished until Latin America comes to grips with its own identity.

"The main problem of Latin America," he said, "is not to have but to be."

"When Latin America has used its own resources," he continued, "according to objectives defined by Latin Americans, then and only then we may feel as an individual continent."

VIEWING WITH ARNOLD

Dean Martin film too much for critic

By JAMES W. ARNOLD

"Murder Row," the second installment of Dean Martin as super-agent Matt Helm, is considerably beyond the descriptive powers of only one critic. The task was farmed out to an imaginary committee of experts, with the following results:

PLOT EXPERT: After stumbling into occasional pitfalls of originality in "The Silencers," the Helm writers have fought their way back into the Bond mainstream. "Row" has a super-villain (Karl Malden) doesn't overplay it more than usual) with a super-weapon who directs his world-wide private army via intercom from his private fortified island. Malden also has a blonde co-conspirator and a huge stupid bodyguard: instead of steel hat, the bodyguard has a steel plate on his skull.

Other conventions observed: Bondian music, car and murder gadgetry, and throw-away gag lines after somebody dies (a baddie is killed by a poison dart blown from a cigarette, and the camera focuses on the crumpled package; "Caution, Cigarette Smoking May Be Hazardous to Your Health").

There are also pop art costumes for the girls, and a wild dance in a discotheque that ends in a riot. "Row" cleverly swipes almost the whole final sea chase from "Thunderball," even down to the helicopter-roped rescue of hero and heroine (improvising, director Henry Levin coaxes a laugh out of Martin's polka-dot shorts).

GIRL-WATCH EXPERT: Only a fool could hope to capture it in words. Besides the lush-lush-lush (Camilla Sparo) who is fond of exchanging co double-enders with her Helm, we are treated to two ecstatic (one must control oneself) go-go bits by the noted choreographer Ann-Margret.

For minor kicks, and to maintain interest when the exposition gets heavy, there are fast glimpses of bikinis, and a potpourri of bosom and rear-end jokes.

RAT-PACK HISTORIAN: It's always amusing to see what Martin films do with their hero's known affection for loafing, liquor and Sinatra. I wouldn't want to spoil it for you, but once Dean has to throw a stray bomb at a picture of Frank, and another time Dean's bar converts into a large wheel with a bottle on each spoke. Dean leans back, spins the wheel, squirts the booze and (brace yourself) crooms "There's an Old Spinning Wheel in the Parlor."

SADISM EXPERT: It's pretty darn exciting. There's a blonde dead in a food freezer, and a girl who puts a bomb in a guy's bathtub. Malden ties Ann-Margret up and shoots arrows at her, keeps missing and finally kerplunks one into Miss Sparo. For laughs bad guys are frozen into ice statues and also despatch each other with a trick gun. Nothing, however, is as magnetic as the way the man with the steel skull dies, unless it is the moment when the heroine has a time-bomb on her dress while she's doing the frug and the hero has to rush in and tear it off.

SATIRE EXPERT: Of course,

"Row" is merely spoofing the extravagant plots of the big spy genre. Basically, it is ridiculing the plentitude of undraped flesh, the indestructible and amoral genius of the hero, the cackling of the villains, the use of extreme violence and death as a means of entertainment. It is much like exposing the dangers of freeway driving by going 80 m.p.h. in a lane of oncoming traffic. At any rate, the film is public-spirited, and so devastating no one will want to have a drink, ogle a pretty girl, kill somebody or see a James Bond film over again.

MORALIST: The humor may be a trifle bizarre, but one must remember this is light entertainment, designed to help people (especially teen-agers) forget sexual pressures and general hostility. Actor Martin is a genial family man who has to scrape out a living. No one should suppose there is a deeper meaning to the story, unless perhaps it is construed as a playful comment on the absurdity and meaninglessness of modern man's search for self. The good guys, of course, win, and that is a worthwhile lesson.

The expert consensus seems to be that "Row" is even more forgettable than "The Silencers," itself perhaps the greatest film since "Circus World." There will be yet a third Matt Helm adventure, producer Irwin Allen promises, but in the long meantime, "Row" is heartily recommended for tasteless illiterates everywhere.

(Rating: B—objectionable in part for all.)

Charles Stimming will be speaker

INDIANAPOLIS—Charles E. Stimming, past-president of the Archdiocesan Council of Catholics Men, will be the guest speaker at the St. Christopher Annual Husband-Wife Holy Name breakfast Sunday, Feb. 12. Mr. Stimming is a member of St. Joan of Arc parish, Indianapolis.

Corporate Holy Communion will be received at the 8 a.m. Mass and breakfast will be served at the Speedway Motel after Mass. Richard Zeph is president of the Society.

The General Assembly

(Continued from page 1) House and Senate education committees. The prospects seemed good that it would be sent to the floor for debate and vote. Supporters of a compulsory fair-bus law, however, are deeply worried that the time factor is going to work against the measure, as it did in 1965, when a bill was passed by the House, only to die in the Senate Education Committee.

(The General Assembly now is in the fourth week of its session, which ends March 6. It is burdened by an "overkill" of measures, some of them of paramount importance, and few of them yet near passage.)

BACKERS OF fair busing also are worried by reports that organized correspondence opposing it is far outnumbering letters supporting it. These backers have stressed the importance of intelligent, concise, brief and friendly letters to lawmakers, as well as to daily newspapers, stating the case for the bills. They also urge constructive personal contacts with assemblymen in whose hands the fate of the legislation rests.

What one observer termed "an impressive hearing" on H.B. 1160 awarding substantial tuition grants for full-time students at private universities and colleges was held in the House Education Committee last week. Dr. Landrum Bolling of Earlham College and several other private college presidents were said to have made a strong case for the measure, without opposing argument. A companion bill also has been introduced in the Senate.

Little has been heard in recent days about the so-called "Junior G.I. Bill of Rights." It would give $50 annually to each student in all the state's public and non-public elementary and high schools. The sum then would be endorsed over to the student's school. A similar measure got nowhere in 1965.

Two educational measures of interest to Catholic taxpayers, who contribute their share to the upkeep of public schools, were introduced last week in the House by Representatives Ray P. Crowe (R., Indianapolis) and Richard C. Bodine (D., Mishawaka). The bills (H.B. 1426 and 1427) would permit public school systems throughout the state to provide free textbooks at taxpayers' expense without the present need for two-thirds of the freeholders in a school district to sign favorable petitions.

A HOUSE BILL on which some church leaders are keeping a wary eye was introduced last Tuesday. It would tighten tax exemptions for religious, educational and literary purposes. This measure (H.B. 1485), co-sponsored by Representatives John M. Mutz (R., Indianapolis) and Nicholas V. Angel (D., Munster), provides that exemptions be permitted only when property is used for charitable purposes and empowers the state Board of Tax Commissioners to grant or deny those exemptions.

Some critics fear this may give the commissioners too much authority and conceivably could lead to a situation where a future Tax Board dominated by persons basically inimical to church exemptions would impose harsh and even destructive restrictions.

A bill designed to curb prostitution was passed by the House last week. It would make arrests easier and increase the maximum penalty to a fine of $1,000 and 2 to 5 years imprisonment.

Harriette Bailey Conn (R., Indianapolis) last Friday introduced House measure H.B. 1621 which would liberalize state legislation on abortions. At the same time, it would impose stern penalties on women soliciting medicine for miscarriage or undergoing abortive operations illegal under the proposed law. Mrs. Conn said she thinks the situation is serious enough to warrant a fair hearing.

Mrs. Conn also was co-sponsor with Frederick T. Bauer (D., Terre Haute) of a bill (H.B. 1417) exempting persons adhering to voluntary plans to maintain a biracial stability in their neighborhoods from cease-and-desist orders on discrimination by the Indiana Civil Rights Commission. The bill also contains a declaration of public policy in favor of eliminating segregation.

Next to the "if-you're-old-enough-to-fight-at-19-you're-old-enough-to-vote" bill (already passed by the Senate) and possibly the hottest issues in the Assembly is the proposed Sunday closing law. Both sides are using the Bible, the Constitution, and—for all this reporter knows—Playboy Magazine and Batman in support of their arguments.

But the Indianapolis News quoted some Statehouse wit as having had the last word on the closing law: "The Lord didn't have to worry about discount houses."

HEADS XAVIER ALUMNI—Carl T. Reis, partner in the Indianapolis law firm of White, Raub, Reis & Wick, has been elected president of the Xavier University Alumni Association for 1967. Reis, a member of St. Plus X Church, will direct the association's alumni plans.

Cut-off of U.S. school funds 'bewildering'

ALEXANDRIA, La.—A recent announcement by the U.S. Office of Education that Catholic school students in the diocese of Alexandria are not eligible for federal aid was termed "disappointing, and somewhat bewildering" by a diocesan spokesman.

Father Murray Clayton, director of the Alexandria diocesan bureau of information, noted that policy statement promulgated by Bishop Charles P. Greco of Alexandria and implemented here for the past two years requires acceptance of qualified children into any and all Catholic schools without regard to race.

The U.S. Office of Education has refused some $30,000 in school materials which had originally been expected to upgrade the education of Catholic students here. The students were previously thought to be eligible for the benefits under terms of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act. A similar decision was reached in regard to the diocese of Lafayette, La.

THE BASIC CAUSE for the adverse ruling here is the fact that the diocese of Alexandria operates 11 schools whose enrollments are entirely Negro. The elimination of a "dual school system" is considered the most important requirement for federal funds, according to a memorandum issued recently by Harold Howe II, U.S. Commissioner of Education.

Father Clayton said that although only nine Negro children attended previously all-white Catholic schools in the diocese in 1965-66, a total of 111 do so

PLAN SCACINA CARD PARTY—Scacina Memorial High School will sponsor its annual Mardi Gras Card Party on Tuesday, Feb. 7, at 8 p.m. in the school cafeteria. All games will be played. Proceeds will go to the school's music department, mainly to cover the purchase of new band uniforms. The ladies above examining part of one of the new uniforms are, left to right, standing: Mrs. John Meyer, Mrs. Jay Doyle, Mrs. Robert Heede and Mrs. Vernon Reynolds. Seated: Mrs. Leona Young, Mrs. Ram Brindley and Mrs. J. C. Saunders. Tickets for the card party may be purchased at the door.

PITTSBURGH PRELATE

Denies that Catholic schools are 'cause' of segregation

By JOHN G. DEEDY
PITTSBURGH—Parochial schools were defended here against the charge that they are "a real cause" of defacto segregation in inner-city areas.

Auxiliary Bishop John B. McDowell, school superintendent for the diocese of Pittsburgh, said the cause rests rather with the flight of white families to the suburbs.

He also said that "if the Catholic school population remains more constant" in racial composition, "then it is evident that Catholic school parents are not leaving (the inner-city) as quickly" as non-Catholic parents.

Viewed in this light, the contribution of the strong parochial school is "a plus—not a minus factor," Bishop McDowell declared. "This, properly used, could be a weapon in fighting the depressing war on segregation."

He conceded that "the holding power of the parochial school in the city has been less than what it should be" and said the challenge is to make it so. "If parents could be assured of a continuing education for their children, first through twelfth grade, one major reason for deserting the city would be eliminated," he said.

Bishop McDowell disputed the contention that the combining of school populations is the ideal solution to school integration.

"It is not beyond the realm of possibility that combining the populations—into one school, when this becomes feasible, would have the effect of accelerating the departure from the inner-city, thus worsening the neighborhood situation—the major problem," he remarked.

Bishop McDowell made clear that he was not endorsing any and they do occur in both directions—a more valid reason than the flight from a changing population pattern must exist."

BISHOP MCDOWELL revealed that enrollment in the Pittsburgh diocese's 234 parochial grade schools has dropped almost 7,500 since a peak in 1961. Almost 90 per cent (about 6,000) of this has been in city grade schools. Enrollment is now 104,095.

In contrast, enrollment in the diocese's 56 high schools has increased 2,300—all outside the city—to a capacity of 20,271.

Bishop McDowell disclosed the figures and discussed the integration situation in his annual schools report.

In the report he also called the War on Poverty "basically sound" and vital to those "who most need and deserve a helping hand." He also found Catholic education today not only relevant to the times but "a tremendous asset to the nation."

IN CIVIL parishes now receiving aid under various titles of the Educational Act, public schools are operating under a dual system with little or no indication of any phase-out in process."

Father Clayton charged. "Why pupils in these schools are eligible for aid because of a court order, while students in Catholic schools—which are de facto more in compliance with government demands—are not eligible, is difficult to understand."

"In one year, peaceful and successful integration of Negro children into previously all white Catholic schools has gone from nine to 111," the priest said, adding that there is "every indication" that the acceleration will continue. "Considering the ratio of Negro Catholics to white throughout the diocese, even the present ratio figure is better than that achieved thus far in the public schools whose students are judged eligible for aid," Father Clayton said.

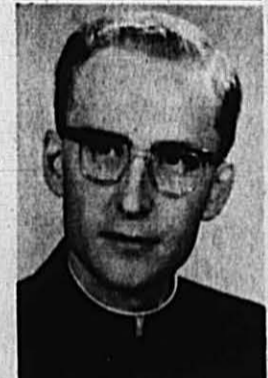

"Withholding needed assistance because of a dual school system operated by the diocese seems unduly stringent at this time. There is no questioning that Negro children would have suffered educationally and morally had these schools not been built. It is these same children who will suffer the greatest harm from the present action of the Office of Education," Father Clayton stated.

Educational TV set for Detroit

DETROIT—The Detroit archdiocese began educational telecasting into parochial schools on February 1.

Father John B. Zwiers, archdiocesan superintendent of schools, said that during the spring semester, it will be devoted primarily to "getting the bugs out of the system" with a full daily schedule to begin in the fall.

During the next four months, Father Zwiers said, enrichment programs for students will be telecast, as well as inservice training programs for teachers on an irregular schedule.

ON 'CHAPEL DOOR'—Father John Roczap, assistant pastor of St. Barnabas Church, Indianapolis, will be the guest speaker on the Chapel Door television program from February 6 through February 10. His subject will be: "Scenes from the Vatican Council." The program is aired over WISH-TV (Channel 8) at 7:23 a.m.

FOR THE RETARDED

Seeks liberalized Communion laws

WASHINGTON — A Washington doctor who has worked for several years towards the liberalization of canon law on reception of Holy Communion by the mentally retarded hopes his plea will receive favorable action in Rome.

Dr. Paul Benoit of the D.C. Department of Vocational Rehabilitation has petitioned the Vatican for a change in Canon 854 which limits reception of Holy Communion to those who understand the difference between ordinary and holy bread. His petition is now under study by the Pontifical Commission for the Revision of the Code of Canon Law.

THERE ARE in the United States alone, Dr. Benoit estimates, some six to eight million Catholics so severely retarded that they will never be able to meet the requirement of the present law.

"We are not asking for the privilege of daily or even frequent Communion for the mentally retarded," Dr. Benoit explained. "Rather we ask that the mentally retarded not be excused from the Church's precept regarding the annual reception of the Sacrament.

"MANY PEOPLE see in the New York.

liberalization of Church law on the points covered in the petition a rich source of consolation to millions of Catholics who live in the presence of severely retarded children—children who forever remain little children in mind."

Dr. Benoit said he had been assured support for his petition from Archbishop Patrick A. O'Boyle of Washington, Cardinal Shehan of Baltimore and Cardinal Francis Spellman of New York.

Sees early demise of death penalty

DENVER, Colo.—A Catholic prison chaplain predicted here that the state will abolish the death penalty within three to five years.

Father Joseph M. O'Malley, Catholic chaplain at the Federal Youth Center in suburban Englewood and an opponent of capital punishment, told an Exchange Club luncheon:

"I think the question will pass in Colorado by 1970 or 1972. After all, it was put on the ballot 13 times in California before it passed. I expect it's going to be on the ballot in every major election from now on."

Colorado voters upheld the death penalty in a referendum last November.

Pittsburgh forms clergy association

PITTSBURGH—Priests in the Pittsburgh diocese have organized an informal association to promote a grass-roots implementation of Second Vatican Council decrees.

Although the group does not yet have a formal constitution, the priests have already voted to call their group the Association of Pittsburgh Priests.

The priests have been meeting for eight months as a study group, without official status, but with the knowledge and sanction of the diocesan chancery. More than 100 priests have participated in discussions.

"... This is one of those really monumental works. There is just nothing like it in English, and I will not live long enough to see anything like it..."
